Rrrrrr Numb. 3587.

The Daily Courant.

Monday, April 13. 1713.

From the Paris Gazette, dated April 15.

Hamburg, March 31.

THE Prince Administrator of Holstein Gottorp has sent the Baron de Gortz to the King of Denmark. The Prince Administrator has likewise sent to France M. Mardefeld Counsellor of State. Some Architects and Ingeniers are marking out the Ground for the Streets of Altena, to the end that Town may be rebuilt more handsome and regular than it was before it was burnt; and the King of Denmark has promised to grant great Privileges to the Inhabitants. The Danish Troops which are returning from the Netherlands are arrived in the Dutchy of Bremen, where they are refreshing themselves; and they are shortly to pass the Elbe to encamp near Lubeck, in order to oppose the Diversion which the Swedes might attempt to make on that Side with the Reinforcements which they expect in Pomerania from Sweden. General Steinbock continues to fortify the Intrenchments which he has caused to be made at Gardingen, where he is incamped; and has secured them by Pallisades and by several heavy Cannon placed on them. The Muscovites have attempted to possess themselves of some advantagious Posts, to cut off the Communication between the Swedish Horse and Foot, but have been repulsed with Loss. They continue to work to make Bridges over the Morasses, Canals, and Ditches, that they may approach Tonningen to bombard it; and the Easterly Winds having dried the Roads, they hope that within a few Days they may carry forward the Artillery provided at Rensbourg. The Swedes on their Part use all possible Precautions to hinder the Effect of the Bombardment. 'Tis said Count Steinbock has caused some Propositions for a Suspension of Arms to be made to the King of Denmark. They write from Copenhagen, that Rear-Admiral Thomsen is sailed with a Squadron of Frigates, to cruise and hinder the Transportation of Troops which the Swedes are preparing to make from Gottenbourg, and that great Diligence is used to fit out the Danish Fleet.

From the Leiden Gazette, dated April 14.

Hamburg, April 7. The Baron de Gortz, Minister of the Duke Administrator of Holstein Gottorp, returned hither to Day from Tonningen, whither he went to confer with Count Steinbock by Permission from the King of Denmark. The Mortality continues among the Swedish Troops; but notwithstanding this, Count Steinbock pretends to maintain for some time still the Posts of Tonningen and Gardingen, having (he says) Provisions enough for that purpose. 'Tis rumoured that the King of Denmark has suspended for some Weeks the Project of bombarding Tonningen, to see whether an Accomodation can be made with the Swedes; which is likely to be true, seeing his Danish Majesty has caused to be deferred, till further Order, the transporting of the heavy Artillery from Glückstad, Rensbourg, and Frederickstad. Our last Advices from Pomerania confirm, that the Muscovites have plundered and burnt to the Ground the Town of Wolgast, where the Dukes of Pomerania had formerly their Residence, in Reprisal for the burning of Altena by the Swedes. But these Letters tell us they met with great Opposition from 25 Swedes and 25 Saxons who had been sent thither as Sauveguards, and from the Crews of several Danish Ships which were at Anchor at Pennemunde and elsewhere; who had divers Skirmishes with the Muscovites whose Number was not above 500: But Major General Staf coming to the Assistance of the latter with 1500 Men, the Opponents were at last forced to give Way. That Major-General returning afterwards to Grypswald, the Mariners of all the Danish Ships which were in that Road got together, and went and broke the Windows of Dr. Schack's House where he lodged; so that the Danish Major-General Seissin was obliged to send thither some Troops to disperse them. The said Muscovite Major General going soon after to thank him, met at his Quarters M. Kaarssen Commadore of a Danish Squadron, who reproached him sharply for the burning of Wolgast and challenged him; but he had the Misfortune to be killed by Major-General Staf. This latter had afterwards high Words with Major-General Seissin, upon whose Refusal to put Grypswald into his Hands he threatned to besiege it, and so went away; but Major-General Seissen caused the Artillery to be drawn out upon the Ramparts, in order to keep off the Muscovites if they should approach it. Mean while the latter are preparing to plunder and burn Anclam, Loitz, and Demin.

From the Leiden Gazette, dated April 18. &c.

Hamburg, April 11. The Baron de Gortz is gone back to Husum, to propose to the King of Denmark and the other Allies of the North, the granting Permission to Count Steinbock to retire to Sweden with his Troops, upon which Condition that Count offers to evacuate Tonningen and Gardingen. We have a Report, that the said Baron was commissioned when he went last to Tonningen, to communicate to Count Steinbock a Project of Accommodation which the Czar of Muscovy had sent to the King of Denmark by an Adjutant-General, importing in Substance. I. That the whole Dutchy of Holstein-Gottorp be yielded to his Danish Majesty. II. That the Dutchy of Bremen be made over to the Duke Administrator of Holstein-Gottorp. III. That the Dutchy of Vehrden be given to the Elector of Hanover. IV. That Prince Charles of Denmark be put into Possession of Eutin and the Bishoprick of Lubeck. V. That Wismar be yielded to the Duke of Mecklenbourg, after demolishing the Fortifications. VI. That Livonia be yielded to the Republick of Poland, except Riga, Revel, Nerva, and Dorp, which are to remain to the Czar. VII. That Stetin be given to the King of Prussia. VIII. And that the King of Sweden keep Stralsund and the Island of Rugen in Pomerania. But if such a Project as this was really proposed, 'tis likely Count Steinbock rejected it; and by the best Information we can get, that Count pretends to treat of nothing more than to be allowed to imbark his Forces and transport them to Gottenbourg, whereas on the other Hand the King of Denmark insists that he yield himself and them Prisoners of War. Things standing thus, 'tis said a Resolution is taken by the Allies to attack the Swedes in their Intrenchments at Gardingen, and then to bombard Tonningen. In order to it, the Muscovites are already advanced within a League of Tonningen; another Body of their Troops is likewise advanced near to Gardingen; they are busy in making a great Number of Fascines; and they are finishing the Bridges which they have laid over all the Rivulets and Morasses in the Way to Gardingen, which Work of theirs is admired by all that see it.

From the Hague Courant, dated April 19.

Hamburg, April 14. There are frequent Skirmishes between the two Armies; and in all Appearance the Allies will find it very difficult to drive the Swedes into Tonningen, they being well provided for Defence at Gardingen, insomuch that some Generals are of Opinion 'twill be necessary to bombard them in their Intrenchments there. When Prince Menzikoff was last at Husum, the Russians plundered the Bakers Houses in Frederickstad, and took the Corn by Force out of the Burghers Warehouses: But assoon as his Highness had Notice of this from the Magistrates, he sent Order for Restitution to be made to every Person injured. Letters from Copenhagen say, that from that City to within a Mile of Elsinore, divers Redoubts were thrown up at proper Distances, to defend the Coast against any Descent. Some Danish Ships with 4000 Soldiers on board having appeared standing off and on the Coast of the Island of Rugen, the Swedes were apprehensive of their making some Attempt on that Island where there is now no Troops: The Garrison of Stralsund likewise is very weak.

Hamburg, April 14. 'M. Gortz returned to Husum 'the 9th Instant from hence: M. Welling has refused to consent to an Agreement which Count 'Steinbock is willing to make with the Danes, but told M. Gortz that he would leave Count Steinbock to act as he pleased without opposing it. M. Gortz 'was to go again the 10th to Tonningen, to acquaint 'Count Steinbock, that his Danish Majesty rejecting 'that Count's Proposal to imbark his Men at Tonningen for Gottenbourg, insisted peremptorily on 'his surrendring them Prisoners of War, on Condition of being set at Liberty afterwards by Virtue of a 'Cartel, and then transported to Sweden. Mean 'while all Preparations are made for attacking the 'Swedes at Gardingen the Day after Easter, in order 'to the driving them into Tonningen and bombarding it; unless M. Gortz prevent it by an Accomodation.

Hague, April 18. 'We have Advice from Pomerania, that the Muscovites after having burnt Gertz 'and Wolgast, were just going to burn Anclam, 'when they received a Counter-Order from Prince 'Menzikoff, which however did not restrain them 'from plundering that Town. 'Twas said those Orders for Burning, were sent from Konigsberg by the Czar, who was extremely enraged at the threatening Discourses made by a certain Minister to Prince Kurakin; and that he appeared determined to treat very rigorously some Merchants at Archangel and Moscow, if more Cause of Provocation should be given him. The Advices by the Way of Warsaw and Vienna, relating to the King of Sweden, are still various; but all agree that the Turks go on diligently with their Preparations of War against the Muscovites.

'ders
